

What if she forgets me?

What Is Timeline Confusion™?

Presented by Rachael Wonderlin, MS, an internationally recognized dementia care expert and educator. She has a master's in gerontology and is a Johns Hopkins University Press two-time published author. Rachael is the owner of Dementia By Day, a dementia care consulting firm and education company. While Rachael works primarily with senior living companies looking to build or better their dementia care programs, she also loves educating dementia care partners through her blog, podcast, and YouTube channel. She has been featured in Senior Housing News, The Washington Post, Forbes, and on PBS Next Avenue. One of Rachael's clients, English Meadows, won first place in Senior Housing News' 2022 Aspect Awards for their brand launch of Lavender Hills—a brand Rachael worked closely with them to build.

Many care partners fear the day that a loved one living with dementia will forget who they are—but does this really happen? Does someone with dementia actually “forget” their friends and family? Let's dive into a tough topic and break down some important stigmas and stereotypes about how dementia works.

We'll talk about what to do when someone with dementia struggles to understand their timeline.
